Lisabet Wolf was originally Lisabet James, and until her thirteenth birthday she and her family lived on the world of Proserpina in Prefecture III. A farming family, they made do with what they had on the edges of the swamplands on the continent of Bragadin. The day she turned thirteen, she lost her father, mother and only sibling to blood limpets. Generally these semi-reptilian creatures only catch the unwary, but an unseasonably wet summer fostered an explosion in the native population, leading to her family's death.

The Scimitar MkII Hover Combat Vehicle is an upgraded version of the venerable Scimitar Medium Hover Tank, which has been in the armies of the various House Lords for well over a hundred years. The MKII not only increased the vehicle's top speed, but by trading out the heavier autocannon of the original design, it was able to increase the number of weapons on the craft, as by the inclusion of five energy weapons—unusual on any vehicle.

WC437-33AB, like many of the vehicles in the Wolf Lancers, was scavenged from forgotten battlefields throughout the Republic; the Steel Wolves may accept the Inner Sphere warriors as having proven their worth, but that does not mean they will equip them with their superior Clan technology. The current pilot of the Scimitar, Lisabet Wolf, has named it "Blood Limpet," a disturbing homage to the animal that killed her family.

With nothing left to keep her on the farm, she slowly made her way to the capitol, Conqueror's Pride, and managed to find enough work to pay for travel off-planet. Several years of wandering brought her to the world of Tikonov, where she was introduced to the Clan culture for the first time.

The Clan way offered a structure and society that appealed to her, and she immediately began to petition for acceptance into the Steel Wolves' Wolf Lancers. Because of her age and lack of training, she was ignored. However, after eighteen months of dogged determination, the unit's commander felt that her persistence was her strength and accepted her petition, giving her the training she needed to test out in the Wolf Lancers.
