Janella grew up in a noble household on the world of Fletcher. Her mother was a well-respected jurist and her father was a genius whose work in gene therapy for disease earned him an honorary Republic Knighthood.

Janella combines the best of both parents, which enabled her to gain admittance to the Murchison Military Academy where she achieved recognition both for her intelligence and the speed with which she adapts to any situation.

Upon graduation she was offered a position in The Republic military, but she got a deferral to earn her law degree. Graduating third in her class, she became licensed to practice law, and The Republic quickly found her very useful as a negotiator in certain disputes. Ever an overachiever, she worked hard to solve problems without resorting to violence, something she realizes is not always possible.

Her varied skills and impressive achievements both on and off the field of battle brought her to the attention of the Knights of the Sphere, who offered her a chance to be inducted into their Order. As ever, her skill, tenacity, and achievements led her to pass through the Knight-Errant phase very quickly, and she has since served with distinction as a Knight.

Though it began production too late to have any effect in the war against the Word of Blake, the Tundra Wolf was the first Clan Wolf design wholly designed and produced in the Inner Sphere. Like many of the Tundra Wolves found in The Republic, this unit was shipped to those Wolf warriors from Delta Galaxy who pledged themselves to the formation of The Republic.

WC320-00L was piloted by the first Wolf warrior to be offered a place in the Knights of the Sphere, and he was allowed to retain the design upon accepting that great honor. After his death, the design became a part of the Knights, to be bestowed upon the next worthy individual in need of such a powerful 'Mech.

The current pilot, Janella Lakewood, has named it "Andrea" to honor her mother.
