On the surface, there's little reason to believe that the quiet and often antisocial Jaquelin Pejiko is anything more than her official record claims: a woman who escaped the shattered world of Outreach as part of a Republic program to redeem troubled youth, and who enrolled at the Conservatory on Liao. In fact, her less-than-pristine criminal record supports this desperate past. What raises red flags for our analysts, however, are her inexplicably high marks in early MechWarrior training, and their sharp decline just ahead of her final year in the Conservatory.

This sudden drop derailed what could have been a promising career as a Republican MechWarrior, and has no obvious impetus, despite Pejiko's rocky background. Even more baffling is why she seems content with her resulting role as a mere support pilot, while her comrades see her more as a failure and a criminal.

Michaelson Heavy Industries unveiled their latest addition to the VTOL market only five years ago when they introduced the Crane heavy transport, a specialized infantry and cargo transport. Lightly armed and armored, but with excellent speed, maneuverability, and cargo space, the Crane is ideal for quickly moving large amounts of supplies or troops over difficult terrain.

Jaquelin Pejiko's Crane was built for The Republic as part of a program to upgrade the logistics network in the 3110s. Though her skills at the controls are remarkable, for a woman initially trained as a MechWarrior Pejiko flies into battle surprisingly cautiously since her C.O. insisted on marking her Crane with bright-red crosses. She prefers to hold back at a safe distance from any fighting in order to drop cargo and troops, and often must be prodded to enter a "hot" LZ to provide medical assistance.
